The Six Companies is likely to remain in power for a long time and to have a great following. When the floods occurred in China last year the Six Companies responded nobly to the appeals for assistance. In return the Emperor of China sent to the Six Companies a sign which bore with it a wish tantamount to a command that the organization should last 10,000 years. Many of the coolies fear that if they attempt to break up the Six Companies some great evil will befall them. The sign hangs in the quarters of the Six Companies. No one will remove it for fear that he will be stricken while doing it. The new organization hopes to get possession of the old quarters, and its members will then announce that they are the Six Companies.—Seattle (Wash.)

Given a home and a plot of land, the average white man will thrive under almost any climatic conditions. Further than this, the small homesteader becomes a factor in the development of the country whose place cannot be filled by a population of hirelings. The latter act more in the capacity of a leech they are satisfied so long as they reap a fair return for their labor, and are ready when the source of wealth is exhausted to pull up stakes and cast about for some other favorable opportunity. At a meeting of the Proportional Representation League held in Saratoga, N. Y., William Dudley Faulke gave an exhaustive discussion of the various systems of electoral reforms inaugurated to insure the proper representation of all minority voters. The cumulative system which is the best known is characterized as having many advantages over the present method, but has defects which are decidedly against its being put in general use. Under the cumulative system each voter may divide their suffrages, so as to give any one of the three candidates three votes, or two for one and one for another, or one and a half votes to each of two candidates. This method aims at proportional representation but does not secure it as is the case when the votes are centered on a popular man, thereby electing the two remaining candidates by a minority vote. The minority secures a representation but the representation is by no means propor

As is the case in many of the reforms inaugurated in the republican form of government it is neces sary to turn to Switzerland to obtain a system that reaches the best degree of perfection. The competitive free list system has been adopted in four of the Swiss cantons and has proved the best of the plans thus far evolved. Each voter has as many votes as there are candias he pleases, giving one to each candidate. The parties to which Countess Anna Kapriste says these candidates belong are designated by title in the ballot papers. "Should the voter not use the entire number of votes to which he is entitled, his votes are counted for the party which he designates. Votes cast count individually for the candidates as well as for the members to be elected to give the Each party is entitled to as many members as it has quotas, and the candidates receiving the highest number of votes in each party
